In a patient of Charcot s who died in the Salpetriere there was found at the autopsy a perfect muscular uterus, without any trace of a central cavity; the os uteri, however, was perforated, but the Fallopian tubes were closed. The ovaries were found to be normal, covered with menstrual cicatrices; yet this woman, very lascivious, had never menstruated. Naturally ardent and unsatiated, she had acquired the symptoms of extreme hysteria, and her nights were troubled with voluptuous and lascivious dreams. 3. Imperforation and Atresia of the Neck of the Uterus.-- Congenital imperforation of the neck of the uterus most often coincides with other malformations of the genital canal, as double uterus and vagina. It is complete, extending the entire length of the cervical canal,...
