With these semi-confessions too many of us must make, we can scarcely be surprised that the public should get some unfavorable impressions. Of all the professions of life that of the law is of the keenest daily concern. To know the law is to know man s necessities as a citizen. It is the science of man and man. The lawyer stands next to the law, its recognized disciple and exponent! He stands thus between man and man, between the state and the citizen, at the very focus of human relations where meet th e million conflicting interests. From his very position and the nature of his knowledge he becomes the oracle and authority of men. The greedy and the benevolent, the bold and the timid, the vicious and the defenseless, the vile and the good,...
