Do not be alarmed at the seriousness of the indication: do not anticipate a tedious sermon: I shall be brief, and will endeavour not to be prosy. True religion requires not many precepts: it is comprised wholly in these two grand and beautiful ideas, the existence of a God, and the immortality of the soul, and in that pure morality which was taught by the Saviour of men. The most worthy homage that we can pay to the Supreme Being, consists in making a good use of time, and in rendering all the services we can to our fellow creatures. Yet, whatever may be your religious creed, sect, or persuasion, be assured that your time will not pass either smoothly or profitably, unless you seek and receive the blessing of your Maker upon you daily. In the evening, recall the day,...
