Not illustrated. 1880 Excerpt: .and mass of the lamina, x and z the distances of the point from its axis and plane, and p the angle between the greatest and least distances r and r_2 of the point from its circumference, which latter has a constant value for every point of each segment of every sphere of definite radius passing through the circumference. From which, differentiating with respect to x and to z , and remembering that for each segment of every such sphere, $r^2 = 2rz$, where r is the radius of the sphere, we get, after some trifling reductions, $\theta = \arccos \frac{z}{r}$, $\theta = \arccos \frac{z}{r}$, which manifestly prove the two properties in question. The fixed point through which, as shown by the preceding values of its components parallel and perpendicular to the plane of the lamina, the resultant attraction passes, for each segment of the sphere, is easily...
